

Painter and Sculptor

RICHARD FOX

Darl-e and the Bear

Richard Fox is a self-taught artist with an instinctive eye for the interaction between form and space. He has exhibited widely in London and around the UK over the last ten years, and installed his elegant sculptures in public spaces in Oxford and in several of its Colleges.

In his sculptures, Fox explores the use of different materials – wood, marble and bronze – and their individual relationships with the final aesthetic. Each work investigates the synergy between movement, space, form and how we connect with abstract structures.

Fox's wooden works demonstrate a unique skill in creation - using sycamore and natural pigment, each sculpture twisted and turned, sanded and varnished to withstand temperature variation and moisture changes.

Although predominately a sculptor, Fox has recently been experimenting with painting and bringing his ideas about our connection with abstraction into immersive landscapes. He uses natural earth pigments which he mixes in which the paint to create a vast, textured surface.

Fox is also looking to increase the scope of his practice with the use of ceramics. These ceramics will combine his eye for sculptural form with his energetic and tactile painting style.
